CLTV: Teachers love to get an apple; in Chicago, it's especially appreciated when it's a Golden Apple.

CPS CEO Arne Duncan: Congratulations, you've won the Golden Apple Award!

[students applaud]

CLTV: The coveted Golden Apple Award went to a teacher at Chicago's KIPP Ascend Charter School today. The public school CEO was there to surprise the teacher, Tracy Kwock, with the news this morning; you're watching it as it unfolded. That award is given to teachers all over the area for their professional excellence and they are nominated by their students.

Kwock: The wonderful thing: you're not only able to recognize what I love, but also amazing students and a faculty and school that is just doing outstanding things.

Duncan: We actually have five Chicago Public School teachers who have received Golden Apple Awards. We're just very, very encouraged and just thank all of these teachers for their hard work all over the city.

CLTV: Tracy gets a tuition-free fall term sabbatical at Northwestern, an Apple computer, and $2500. That's a woman making a difference.
